METERBOLOGICAL SURVEY OF THE GREAT AMERICAN LARES.-LIEUT. MAURY'S LECTURE the deen was last night filled with eager listeners to delivered in that city before the Mechanic's Institute, as giving a clearer idea of the main points than we equent to the Lecture.

The lecturer commenced by referring to the magnitude of the chain of lakes, containing as they did one third of the fresh water on the surface of the The entire surface of the earth was divided as fol-

SOURNE WILES. MAGNITUDE OF THE LAKES.

The great chain of Lakes have been estimated to contain eleven thousand cubic miles of fresh water. To give an idea of the amount of this wast body of To give an idea of the amount of this vast body of water, after explaining the mode of the careful measurements of the Mississippi river at Memphis, the lecturer said that the takes contained more water than the Mississippi discharges into the Gulf of Mexico in one hundred years. In other words, were all waste from the takes by eva; oration and other causes to be cut off and a single is opened the size of the Mississippi channel, it would flow for a century, in draining these vast inland seas.

The lakes themselves contain a surface of 2,000 square miles, and they drain a territory or their water-shed of 50,000 square miles. water-shed of 50,000 square rulles. THEIR INFLUENCE ON CLIMATE.

From the above figures it may well be imagined that this vast extent of fresh water maintains and subserves most important influences and purposes as pertaining to the climate, temperature, and hygiene of their vast surrounding or tributary region. There is a difference not universally well understood between the effects on climate incident to their being salt or fresh. Were the lakes salt water like the Casman, they would eithe to their region a like the Caspian, they would give to their region a warmer temperature. The winters, the latitude remaining the same, would be milder, the summers more sultry. This arises simply from the effects of evaporation. Fresh water, according to the observations of Prof. Chapman at Montreal, evaporates forther than only faster than salt, carrying off more heat.

EVAPORATION AND ITS EFFECTS. The amount of the vaporation of the lakes was illustrated as follows:—The Cataract of Niagara represents the excess of the accretions by rains to the lakes and therein water shed over the effect of evaporation. But the observations on the Mississippi indicated that but one-sixth or one seventh sippl indicated that but one-sixth or one seventh of the water that fell upon the water shed of that a river were discharged by it, leaving the remaining larger share to be accounted for by evaporation.—
Thus in the lakes the evaporation may be represented as five or six lines the amount of the water at Niagara, and to produce this evaporation requires the name amount of heat that would suffice to rates the Niagara to beiling point, if such a thing may be imagined, and imagining this we may conceive of what is actually going on. The loss of this amount of heat, parted with by the lakes leaves them and their region colder in the summer and winter.

WATER SALT AND PRESH.

WATER SALT AND PRESH. In salt lakes, the water enters the winter warmer than does fresh water from this loss of heat to the latter. And in winter there is a further difference. When fresh water is exposed to a change of tumperature, it grows denser until it reaches 30 degrees or near freezing, when it expands, thus rising to the surface. These lakes in winter have their coldest water at the surface. With salt water the reverse is true, and the water continuing to grow denser with a lower temperature sinks and grow denser with a lower temperature sinks and leaves the surface water the warmest. Were the lakes salt water, navigation would con-tinue the entire year round.

IMPORTANCE OF LAKE COMMERCE. These preliminaries passed, the speaker connect. These preliminaries passes, the distribution of the lake regions, of which he proceeded to speak. Quoting freely and with honorable mention of their anthor, the full and clear reports of Col. Graham of this city, he reviewed fully the perils to which lake fleets are

According to Col. Graham's Report for 1855 to the Department at Washington, the value of the shipping and commerce interested in the construc-tion of a single breakwater at Michigan City, was $218,000,000.

According to observations taken, the value of

According to observations takes, the value of shipping and commerce passing the flate of the St Clair on an average of 230 days for the busy sca-son, reached the daily average of $1,129,223. The entire value of the Lake commerce was $200,000, 000 to each Lake, varying, more to Lakes Huron and Michigan, less to Lake Superior, and as Lake Erie is an outlet to others, the amount on that lake was $300,000,000. res $300,000 000.

And it is not the shipper, the vessel owner and the mariner who are alone interested, but it is the producer, the farmers of Illinois, Missouri, Iowa and their sister States, and the consumers of the

The effect of the commerce of the lakes, and their improvement even thus far, has turned the Mississippi upside down. It has actually placed one of its mouths at Sandy Hook. So that the eople of the Mississippi Valley have no slight in-erest in lake improvements.

Study the rates of Lake Insurance; their figures hould have spoken in tones that should command ttention. The losses have been in millions of money. The shricks of victims by disasters should have been heard, and produced the required sys-tem of improvements to Lake Navigation long The nation is enlightened. Our rulers never object to appropriations for scientific subjects on sci-cutific grounds only. OCEAN NAVIGATION. The speaker referred at length and in a most in

The speaker referred at length and in a most interesting manner to the great improvements instituted in ocean navigation, as the fruits of careful scientific and meteorological observations. Voyages had been shortened, tracks marked out, belts of calms, and regions of prevailing winds had been given their place on the chart, and the shorter and quicker path had been clearly and unmistakably given the mariner, where all was uncertainty before.

This had been done by comparing and abstracting the carefully made up logs of sailing vessels, making each a floating observatory, noting wave, wind and weather at all times and in all ports of the sea, the results discussed, compared and deduced by Government.

The same plan is applicable to the lakes. Not duced by Government.

The same plan is applicable to the lakes. Not by giving it to mariners perhaps, but by instructing the government employees, the light-house keepers stationed throughout the entire chain to take observations and report them to Col. Graham, of this city. The Lake Board of Underwriters can instruct their agents in Lake towns and cities to do the same.

The speaker cloquently referred to the aid to science furnished by the electric belegraph, which had well nigh given to the meteorologist omnipresce. It will tell of the barometrical changes at dis tant points, and forerun the coming storm. Then the Associated Press is another agent; it takes up and bears the news to bulletin beards in distant cities, and to the Press. And then the press, with steam-press and steam-driven car, strikes off and disperses the intelligence to all quarters with a speed Rhoderick Dhu and Malise never dreamed of—and thos all know of the coming storm yet a thousand miles away. He insisted on the importance to the lake region of telegraphic interchange of information as to great barometrical changes, instancing interesting and triking examples.

This part of the lecture was full of instruction and value, but our space forbids us to do it justice. He said that the leading nations of the earth had the said that they have been said that they me said that the leading nations of the earth had united in a Maratime Convention, and that they were all engaged, more or less efficiently, in encouraging these meteorological observations by the telegraph, for the sake of their commercial interests. Instancing Holland, he said that it was the case that Dutch shipmasters actually regulated their sailing by these reports, and with confidence and certainty.

The Lake Commerce is more than that of Holland. It has reached a figure we should have deemed chi-It has reached a figure we should have deemed chimerical a few years since for our ocean commerce. He would leave out of question the value of such intelligence to all other departments save commerce. In four years, ending 1858, $10,000,000 and $06 lives were lost on these lakes. Suppose but a quarter of this loss might be due to a lack of the metacomological forecknowledge above shown to be attainable. The same power exists to provide for the lakes as for the salt water (save that the lake wayes wash no cotton growing region.—

close a high compliment to our distinguished izen, Col. Graham, to whom already much is due for the advancement made in this direction, and who might with proper aid from Government in the collection of observations, collate and dis-cuss the same to the almost incalculable advantages of lake Commerce.

We have thus imperfectly sketched the outline of Lieut Maury's lecture. We have done it no justice in many of its features, but in the space allowed have attempted to present its most salient
